"Fake-tortion" Phishing Attacks Targeting Company Email Addresses

A new aggressive form of email attack is here and you need to warn your employees, friends and family. It has been beta-tested and refined in Australia, and now the first incidents have been spotted in the United States.

The sophisticated attackers are targeting potential victims in an email sequence that starts with adult dating links and pornography, which are then followed up with extortion attempts to the victims email contacts because they "recorded what you are watching".

*If this type of scam email makes it through the spam filters into your inbox, do not click on any links, do not reply, and delete the message (or click on the Phish Alert button). Do not download any software to check your computer for viruses, but follow procedure to report these types of criminal emails. Remember: Think BEFORE You Click is more important than ever these days.
