Cybersecurity Tip of The Week- 1/10/18

MORE ON LAST WEEK'S THREAT NEWS...

You may have read in the press or seen our post last week that it was recently discovered that practically all computer systems worldwide have a hardware bug called "Meltdown" and "Spectre". Hardware and software vendors have been working hard to create software patches to get around this problem.

However, bad guys are using this major event to try to trick you into downloading malware that claims to be a patch for the "Meltdown" and "Spectre" hardware issue. Don't fall for it!

In the office, IT will take care of all patching and will notify you about it. Do not act on any emails or popups that tell you to urgently update your computer. At the house, take the same precautions. Patches should only come from official sources like the manufacturer of your PC or the developers of your Operating System (Microsoft Windows or Apple Mac).

*In the meantime, please stay extra vigilant, with security top of mind and Think Before You Click.
