Cybersecurity Tip of the Week- 3/13/2020

FAKE CORONAVIRUS WEBSITES ARE HERE

There is a malicious website pretending to be the Johns Hopkins University COVID-19 global cases map.

Anyone searching the internet for COVID-19 information could unwittingly navigate to the malicious website.

Visiting the fake website infects the user with the AZORult trojan, an information-stealing program that can take a variety of sensitive data. It's likely being spread via infected email attachments, malicious online advertisements and social engineering.

The correct web address for the Johns Hopkins University COVID-19 global cases map is <https://coronavirus.jhu.edu/map.html>.

Remember: Only click hyperlinks and email attachments you know and trust. If it looks suspicious, it probably is.
